During the Christmas rush in London the intriguing story was reported of the tramp, who apparently through no fault of his own found himself locked in a well-known chain store late on Christmas Eve.

It was late at night when he realized he'd been trapped. Hardly could he explain to himself how that had happened. When he got to the shop it was nearly the closing hour: he ~~stayed~~ stayed overtime! He knew why: everything in the shop - the decorations, the Christmas trees - was so attractive!

The hours passed, but the tramp continued to sit there, enjoying the atmosphere. He got so carried away that he almost forgot his deadly hunger. But then he came across the food section and couldn't help drinking a bottle of water and eating a sandwich. He felt so guilty, but he couldn't do anything about it.

The morning came and he saw the door opening. It was the police officer checking the store before its opening. The officer noticed the tramp and took him to the police station. He asked the tramp ~~and~~ some questions about that night, but when the man told his story he didn't believe him and sent him to prison.

Later that day the director of the store came there to ~~to~~ learn more about the accident. He took his little daughter with him. She stared at the tramp with a smile on her face. The tramp involuntarily smiled back. Then the girl ran to her father and whispered something. Suddenly, he looked at the tramp, smiled and said: "let him go!" The tramp left the cell, came up to the director and thanked him. The man hugged his daughter and answered: "Merry Christmas!"

The tramp was released from prison after seven days. The judge awarded ~~no~~ no compensation to the store for the food and drinks the tramp had consumed.

Hi, Alice,

I'm glad to get a message from you! I haven't seen you for a while. How are you? How is your new house? Do you like it more, than the previous one? How many rooms does it have?

I spent my summer holidays in England. We went to London with a group and the group leader. We were living in British families. Every morning we had to come to the college by bus. We were studying for 3 hours everyday. After that, we went to different excursions. We also spent time in the centre of London. We went shopping, buying souvenirs for relatives and friends. At the afternoon we had a dinner in a college then we had a disco. At the finish of our day we came back home. I liked my holidays very much!

I'm waiting for your next letter.

Best wishes,
Kirill
